An innovative funding model

The Corporate Work Study Program (CWSP) is an innovative and transformative model wherein students work one day per week, every week throughout the academic year to offset the cost of their private college preparatory education. The CWSP is more than just a means to cover education costs. It is a transformative journey that opens doors to a brighter future, breaking the cycle of limited opportunities and paving the way for Cristo Rey students to achieve their dreams.

The financial model of Cristo Rey schools is structured such that, when the school has reached full enrollment, fees from the CWSP (paid by employer sponsors) are expected to cover approximately 50% of a student's tuition and generous benefactors (and school vouchers in some states) will contribute approximately 40%. Cristo Rey families will be asked to contribute what they can afford, covering approximately 10% of a student's tuition.

The CWSP operates as a separate entity, acting as a temporary employment agency within the school. It shares common board governance and management with the school.
